What previous participants have said:

I have talked about boundaries I need to set but with the horses I actually had to walk through the hard part – putting boundaries into action. Very cool.

I see now that I have had personal empowerment confused with abuse and control. My horse was much more interested in me once I was more active in who I am instead of letting him call the shots. Me being strong is not against anyone else. I get that now.

Most of our group had little horse experience but by the time we finished we could completely “have conversations” with our horses and explore our relationship with confidence.
